Is your child doing poorly in Spanish at school? I know the feeling. But in today's competitive world, bad grades in Spanish send the wrong kind of signal to colleges. You could hire a tutor. But there's an even better solution that's cheaper and more effective. Have your child take a learn Spanish course on the computer using specially prepared software.

Computer software makes learning a foreign language easier than ever. It features a variety of different ways to learn, including games. It's fun. And if your child is having fun he or she will actually want to learn.

I wish there was learn to speak Spanish software when I was a student! For example, I was always good at vocabulary and terrible at grammar. With computer software I could have zipped through the vocabulary sections and slowed down for grammar. Plus, I could have reviewed the material any time I felt I needed it.

Years later I tried to relearn Spanish for an upcoming trip to Mexico. I used a textbook, but it was dry and boring. I also wasn't sure I was pronouncing the words correctly. Then I bought some Spanish CDs. These were better at least I could hear the language--but I tend to be a visual person and things didn't sink in too well.

With computer software, you can hear the language, see the language, and write the language. Most importantly, the interactive nature of computers means that you get feedback about how you're doing. You'll know exactly when it's time to move on to the next level.

Here's another thing. Classes and tutors are expensive, so are CDs and tapes. Computer software really gives you the most bang for your buck. In fact, I believe that a learn Spanish course using computer software is the fastest way to fluency there is.

There are a lot of learn Spanish course software packages available today and they're all pretty good. But there can be a big difference in price. I don't see any reason to spend more than you have to. The results will be the same your child will have fun learning Spanish!
